As Nationalists seek another vote on separation, a plea for true reform

Go it alone? Will we need a new Act of Union?

O why should support for the SNP remain so high? Part of the answer lies in the travails of Labour in Scotland, and the ban on Scottish MPs voting in the House of Commons. That ban, which is currently being fought by the Scottish Nationalists, is a prime example of the kind of self-confidence to seek additional powers when they were already in such a position. The SNP has been hampered in its attempts to appeal to the electorate by the fact that it has never been in a position to form a government on its own. The party has been forced to rely on the support of other parties in order to form a government, and this has led to a loss of public confidence in the SNP. The party has also been hampered by the fact that it has not been able to win a majority of seats in any of the elections that it has contested. The SNP has been unable to form a government on its own, and this has led to a loss of public confidence in the SNP.

The SNP has also been hampered by the fact that it has not been able to win a majority of seats in any of the elections that it has contested. The party has been unable to form a government on its own, and this has led to a loss of public confidence in the SNP. The SNP has also been hampered by the fact that it has not been able to win a majority of seats in any of the elections that it has contested. The party has been unable to form a government on its own, and this has led to a loss of public confidence in the SNP.

The SNP has also been hampered by the fact that it has not been able to win a majority of seats in any of the elections that it has contested. The party has been unable to form a government on its own, and this has led to a loss of public confidence in the SNP. The SNP has also been hampered by the fact that it has not been able to win a majority of seats in any of the elections that it has contested. The party has been unable to form a government on its own, and this has led to a loss of public confidence in the SNP. The SNP has also been hampered by the fact that it has not been able to win a majority of seats in any of the elections that it has contested. The party has been unable to form a government on its own, and this has led to a loss of public confidence in the SNP.

The SNP has also been hampered by the fact that it has not been able to win a majority of seats in any of the elections that it has contested. The party has been unable to form a government on its own, and this has led to a loss of public confidence in the SNP. The SNP has also been hampered by the fact that it has not been able to win a majority of seats in any of the elections that it has contested. The party has been unable to form a government on its own, and this has led to a loss of public confidence in the SNP. The SNP has also been hampered by the fact that it has not been able to win a majority of seats in any of the elections that it has contested. The party has been unable to form a government on its own, and this has led to a loss of public confidence in the SNP.